LORD CREWE ARMS

BLANCHLAND

so much moor

“More champagne!” W.H. Auden cried, as he banged out Brahms on the Hilyards clapped out piano, one spring night in 1930. Auden loved opulence just as much as he loved Blanchland’s sense of place. Indeed, reflecting on his time at the Lord Crewe Arms in American vogue.

Hedonism with heart

like Auden’s prose it encapsulates our landscape and laces it with a one-of-a-kind luxury. This paired with our Afternoon tea, well, nothing could be sweeter!
