Mark Chambers Chairman

Mark Chambers

It all began in 1982, when a group of passionate hoteliers joined forces to create an iconic British hotel collection. Led by then industry titan Gerald Milsom, these hoteliers were driven by all things hospitality, quality and creating happy moments for guests. The beauty of the collection then and now remains the celebration of individuality and championing the independent spirit of our hotels. For over 40 years we have followed our inventive spirit and enthusiasm for authentic British adventures. Today, our collection includes distinct hotels across the UK and Channel Islands.

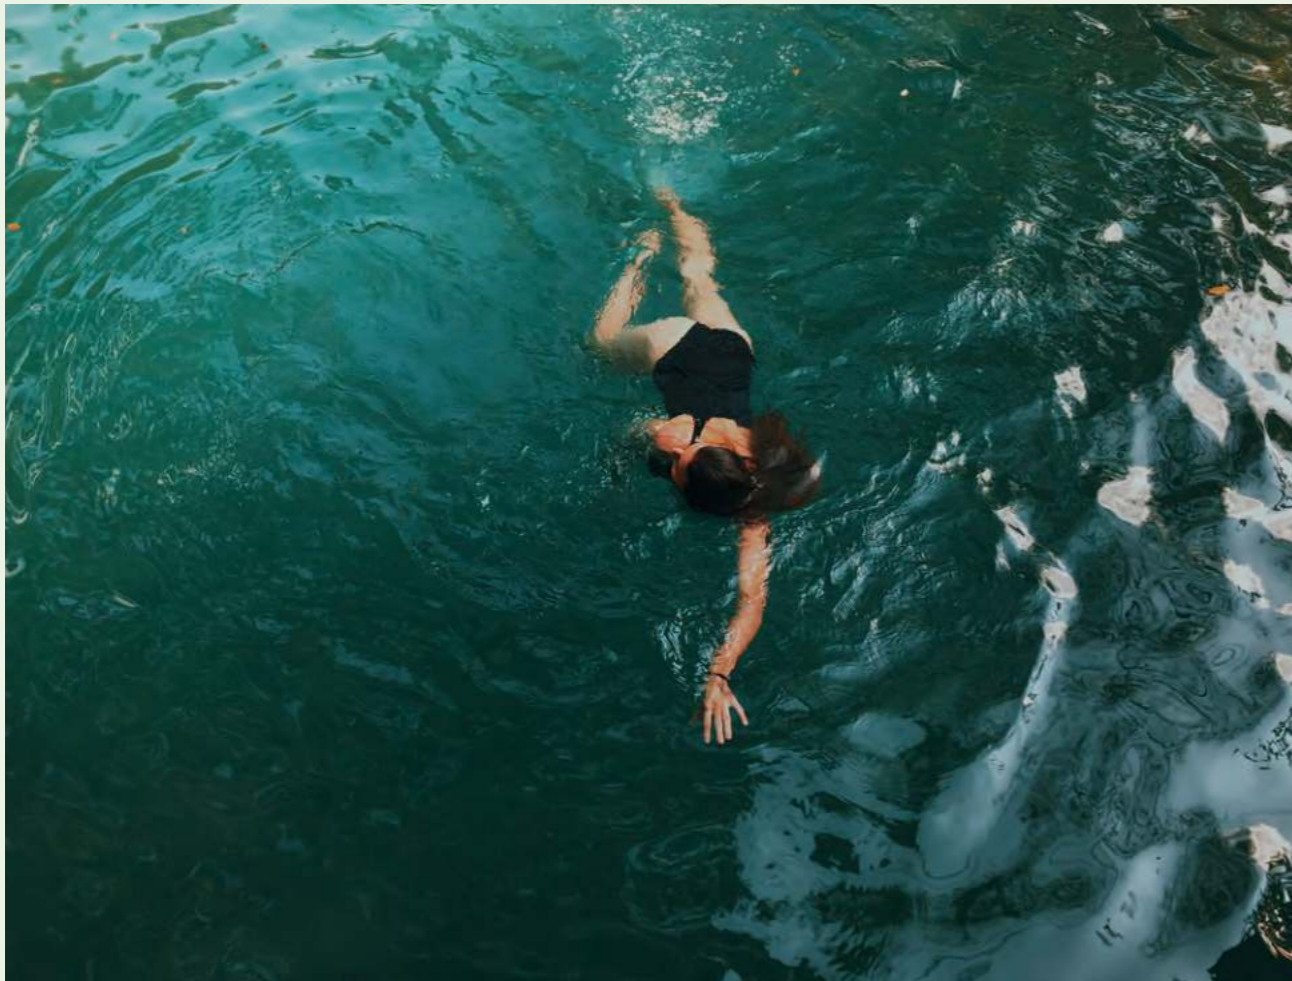

Our hand-picked hotels offer varied destinations for you to choose from. Dive in with wild swimming

Wild swimming is the perfect way to reconnect with nature, soak up glorious landscapes and enjoy a whole host of health benefits. Britain offers some of the most idyllic spots to take the plunge. From lakes, rivers, seas to lochs, waterfalls and scenic waterways, there are a number of magical hidden gems to explore.

Rising in popularity in recent years, there is no doubt that wild swimming is a growing trend, and one that shows no signs of drying up.

Wild swimmers vary from those looking to take a refreshing dip on a balmy summer's day to the more intrepid who enjoy an invigorating winter's plunge. There is one thing they all agree on: wild swimming is an uplifting tonic for the mind and body that is proven to raise fitness levels, circulation and, crucially, to increase endorphins. As cold water sends impulses to the brain due to the change in temperature, many will see an increased sense of happiness and energy levels as these feel-good endorphins are released. Swimming also provides a perfect full body low-intensity workout that's ideal for those with injuries or arthritis, while a variety of studies have shown that swimming may help with blood pressure and controlling blood sugars. As well as these amazing health benefits, wild swimming in rivers and lakes also offers people the chance to take in natural beauty spots from a new and immersive perspective.

With all this in mind, it is no surprise that people have been flocking to wild bodies of water, from Hampstead's famous ponds to some of Britain's most magnificent beaches. While these might be the first spots for many to dip their toe into wild swimming, we've selected five hidden gems from all corners that deliver on wild and wonderful waterholes, stunning surroundings and fascinating backstories.

Llyn Tegid, Snowdonia National Park

Five miles long and backing onto a small beach, Wales’ largest natural freshwater glacial lake is famed for its incredible mountain scenery and deep, crystal clear waters. With a shoreline lined with ancient oak trees, water temperatures in this mile-wide lake range between a very pleasing 14-18 degrees Celsius, so no wetsuits needed. While legend has it that there’s a sunken town beneath the surface, the Welsh version of Atlantis has yet to be discovered...

Post-Dip Tip: Indulge at nearby Palé Hall Hotel, a restful destination featuring individually styled bedrooms dotted around estate grounds, plus a sumptuous selection of dining options from Head Chef Gareth Stevenson. Just what’s needed after a bracing bout of wild swimming!

Easdale Slate Quarries, Scotland

Take a dip like no other at the magnificent slate quarries of Easdale. Once the centre of the Scottish slate industry, this small car-free island can be found 16 miles from Oban and is the smallest inhabited island of the inner Hebrides with just 71 houses.

With one former slate quarry now filled with water, the most striking part is the bright turquoise hue that awaits due to the tiny reflective limestone crystals in the water and only adding to the sense of pure magic, this spot is great for both new and experienced wild swimmers. Shallow at one end and thought to be up to 90m at its deepest point, one great benefit of this enclosed body of water is not only can you skip the cold Atlantic chill, but it heats quickly in the summer sun.

Post-Dip Tip: Located nearby, Airds Hotel and Restaurant is an idyllic spot on the West Coast. Once you’ve warmed up next to the roaring fire with a single malt whisky, guests can enjoy the magnificent sights of nature right here on the doorstep. With plenty of cycle and walking routes, watch out for sightings of seals and otters as you explore.

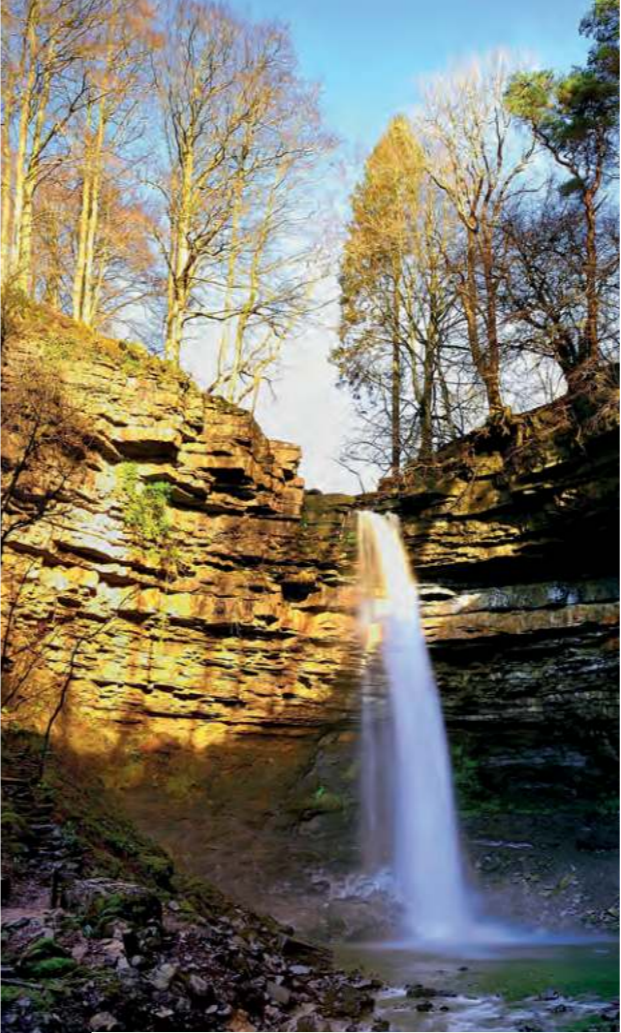

Hardraw Force Waterfall, Yorkshire

Lights, camera, action: this showstopping spot was made famous in the much-loved 1991 film Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves. It may be a while since Kevin Costner last stopped by, but this is a location that continues to deliver on Hollywood glamour. While there are many incredible swimming spots in the Yorkshire Dales, the Hardraw Force Waterfall is 100ft high, making it England’s largest unbroken waterfall and is definitely one to put on any wild swimmer’s to-do list.

Post-Dip Tip: Treat yourself with a stay at chic and contemporary Yorebridge House. The twelve rooms are individually designed, many of which have outdoor hot tubs - perfect for winding down after a day spent exploring the stunning local scenery.

Compton Lock, Winchester

This spot has become so popular with locals that the council have built wooden steps to increase accessibility and help swimmers get in and out safely, and it’s clear to see why. Just three miles south of Winchester and part of the River Itchen, which helped to transport the stone for Winchester Cathedral from Caen in France when it was the capital city of England, this pool of water is surrounded by the prettiest of wild meadows and is the picture-perfect place for a paddle. The shallow areas are ideal for tentative beginners, while also being deep enough to enjoy a proper swim. What’s more, animal-loving swimmers will be happy to share the path to the pool with the local grazing cows.

Crazy Well Pool, Dartmoor, Devon

Sitting high on the moors and hidden away from view, Crazy Well is a large man-made body of water that’s over a mile long and thought to be a flooded tin mine shaft. Given that the water is a little murky, this is a place best suited for more confident swimmers and those who don’t mind not being able to see the bottom as they do their lengths.

Post-Dip Tip: Relax at historic Bovey Castle. Nestled in the rolling valleys of Dartmoor National Park, it offers unrivalled luxury with award-winning dining, an indulgent spa and a wide array of activities from falconry to clay pigeon shooting.

SOME LIKE IT HOT

Healing hot springs have worked wonders for centuries, and some are much closer than you think...

Enjoyed across the world for thousands of years thanks to their warmth and suspected medicinal properties, hot springs offer people an indulgent way to reconnect with the great outdoors. While many of the world's most loved hot spring spots are in far-flung locations, such as Iceland's Blue Lagoon or Dunton Hot Springs in Colorado, Britain itself boasts a number of thermal waters to make the most of, from Bath to Buxton and beyond.

Originating in ancient Japanese, Roman and Greek cultures, bathing has long been considered a gift of the divinity and a magic cure for many diseases. The health benefits of bathing in a hot spring are well-documented, with the high mineral content of iron, sulphate, zinc, magnesium, silica, calcium, and potassium being shown to help skin conditions such as psoriasis, acne and eczema, while also being attributed to help with circulation and even boost metabolism. What's more, bathing in hot springs can even offer temporary pain relief with recent scientific studies showing that soaking in mineral-rich waters can block pain receptors, making bathing a potentially life-changing experience. For these reasons and more, people continue to flock to the world's best hot springs, with many being closer to home than you might think.

WHERE TO DISCOVER HOT SPRINGS

Bath, Somerset

The most famous of Britain’s hot springs can be found in the historic city of Bath, a destination whose popularity dates as far back as Roman times for its magical waters. As well as being the most renowned baths in Britain, Bath’s waters are also some of the hottest, reaching temperatures of 45–46°C – a full 15°C over the average temperature.

Thought to have been formed between 200,000 and 500,000 years ago, Bath’s hot springs are comprised of a mixture of rock formations that are both prone to cracking and highly permeable, which allow water to slowly flow through, while picking up 43 precious minerals and significant heat along the way. The three main springs, only 150m apart from one another in distance, are named the King’s Spring, the Hetling Spring and the Cross Bath Spring, displacing a total of 1,250,000 litres of water per day, or 15 litres per second.

While Bath’s springs boast an intriguing ancient origin legend, of Prince Bladud curing his leprosy and that of his pet pigs in the waters, the true history to Bath’s famous springs is slightly more unclear. The first archaeological activity around the once-hidden hot springs dates back to 8000 BC, with coins from the Iron Ages having been found in the local area.

Assumed to have had the appearance of steam appearing from a swamp and possibly too mysterious for humans to fully seek out, it was the arrival of the Romans that transformed the springs into the historical city we know today. While history surrounding the waters is suitably muddy, it’s presumed that the Romans settled at Bath around a pre-existing Celtic temple dedicated to the goddess Sulis, and their arrival saw the springs transformed into the grand Aquae Sullis site we know today.

Since the baths were transformed into a much larger bathing complex for Romans to enjoy, they have taken on many different roles throughout the years. Often prescribed by doctors and physicians as a cure-all for many skin conditions, gout, rheumatism and sciatica, the popularity of Bath’s waters remained strong until the 20th century, where they now sit as a restored historical site and are an important part of the local and tourist culture for the city.

Those looking to experience Bath’s magical hot springs can visit the Thermae Spa nearby, which receives the thermal waters from the three hot springs and has incredible views across the city from its rooftop area.

Where to stay: Found on the iconic Royal Crescent with its famous curve of Georgian architecture, step back in time with a stay at The Royal Crescent Hotel & Spa. Moments away from the ancient Roman Baths and the centre of the UNESCO World Heritage Site of Bath, enjoy the finest art, gardens and more at this incredible Grade I listed building.

Buxton, The Peak District

While Bath may be the most famous of them all, there are also some incredible hot springs in every corner of Britain. Tucked away in the Peak District, Buxton’s thermal waters reach an impressive 28°C and were once known by the Roman name of Aquae Arnemetiae, the only town outside of Bath to have the prestigious ‘Aquae’ distinction in its name.

Buxton’s mineral waters have had many notable visitors over the years, with one infamous royal family member being Mary Queen of Scots who, as a prisoner, was thought to have been moved around the country by her sister Elizabeth I for her own safety. With the request for Mary to take in the healing magnesium-rich waters of Buxton being accepted, she visited regularly for 11 years in order to help her rheumatism. Having previously been closed by her father Henry VIII, Buxton’s hot spring was reopened with the addition of a building erected to guard Mary from potential threats.

Later the town became a key attraction in the 18th century for health pilgrimages alongside other spa destinations around the UK, such as Cheltenham, Harrogate, Matlock and more.

Other nearby hot springs: Moving down towards the West Midlands, Droitwich Spa’s natural hot springs are packed with mineral salt, making it ten times saltier than seawater. Britain’s answer to the Dead Sea, this water has been popular for many years for its supposed healing powers when it comes to curing many diseases, helping to restore tired muscles and even as a remedy for fatigue.

SOME LIKE IT HOT

Harrogate, Yorkshire

Around 80–100 springs are thought to run through the Yorkshire spa town of Harrogate, with each spring having a slightly different mineral composition, making it the ideal spot for treating a range of medical conditions.

Following the discovery of the springs in ‘High Harrogate’ in the 16th century, the town’s popularity was catapulted with the discovery of sulphur-rich springs in ‘Low Harrogate’ later in the century. While locals were able to venture into the spring’s original marshy areas to scoop up the water, many guests including Royal family members flocked to the Yorkshire town to ‘take in the waters’ and made Harrogate Britain’s most upmarket hotspot.

With the town becoming a fashionable place to bathe from the late 16th century, visitors came from across Europe to enjoy its many healing properties. It was highly common for doctors and physicians to prescribe these visits as a genuine cure for skin ailments, scurvy, epilepsy, rheumatism and even melancholy. Enjoying its own ‘season’ across the summer months, wealthy aristocrats could sample the hot springs through bathing or with glasses of sulphur-rich water to drink throughout the day, offering a real taste of the thermal waters located nearby.

Did you know?

Only the grand Turkish Baths remain at the site of the Royal Baths, and this remains largely untouched since the Victorian times and is the perfect spot to enjoy a slice of history. While Harrogate was a favourite of the rich and famous, a free tap was placed on the outside of the main building to supply the sulphur waters to all, including the poorest in society. You can still find it there today, just make sure to not drink it.

Where to stay: While it was fashionable in the 1800s to drink two glasses of Harrogate’s mineral water before breakfast, we’d recommend swapping sulphur for a stay at Grantley Hall. Located in nearby Ripon, guests can explore the historic spa town of Harrogate and the stunning Yorkshire Dales before relaxing in the opulent interiors at this grand country house.

Living the 5-9 lifestyle

For nature lovers, Britain has an incredible selection of spots in which to take a big step back and an even bigger breath in.

Living the 5-9 lifestyle

Working 9-5 may still be the way to make a living for most people, but making the most of the 5-9 is a growing trend that encourages people to spend their downtime experiencing something new, proving that travel needn't be reserved for the weekend. It's time to clock off and step out of the comfort zone in those precious non-working hours...

As much as the working landscape has changed, with remote working ever on the rise, many people are still tethered to the traditional 5 day working week, and craving the escapes that the weekend and days off give them.

With this in mind, more and more workers are discovering the opportunity those post-work hours give them to experience something new and get out of their comfort zone, relishing what's now known as the '5-9 lifestyle'. It is now more possible than ever to have an adventure or a unique experience that takes just a few hours, whether it be an indulgent spa treatment, a Michelin Star dinner, or a nature-filled experience.

Whether embarking on a nature-filled adventure in the Somerset countryside, heading off for dinner at a Michelin-starred restaurant less than an hour from London, or booking in a pamper treat for the evening, embracing that 5-9 lifestyle and fully switching off has never been easier. Weekdays just became the new weekends...

For nature lovers, Britain has an incredible selection of spots in which to take a big step back and an even bigger breath in, and these aren't just confined to the remotest corners of the countryside. The surrounding countryside of bustling cities such as Bath, Edinburgh, Cardiff, and even London, is bursting with national parks, wildlife, and accessible walks, allowing people to clock off at 5 and be breathing in the majesty of nature by 6 - a perfect antidote to a day at the laptop, especially in the summer months. With even just a short time in natural surroundings having been proven to lower cortisol levels, daily stresses start to disappear as we open ourselves up to nature, and we return to our desks the next morning suitably refreshed.

Live the 5-9 lifestyle: Head to Lucknam Park for an evening of outdoor adventures, from forest bathing to horse riding, using the outdoor gym, or simply exploring one of the trails.

For many, the ultimate switching off experience is a pamper session, and evening spa experiences can be the perfect way to cleanse the mind and body of the working day, and make even a Monday evening feel like a weekend treat. Spas across the British Isles are remaining open later and extending their packages to include a delicious dinner, tapping into exactly what hard workers need at the end of a long day and sending them into the rest of their working week with a renewed sense of wellbeing and relaxation.

Live the 5-9 lifestyle: Book in a treatment at Cottonmill at Sopwell House, just half an hour from London and offering indulgent treatments, state-of-the-art facilities, and a chance for the ultimate relaxation in the Rose Relaxation Room.

For those less naturally gifted cooks, the thought of slaving over a hot stove after a long day is the opposite of switching off. There is only one solution to that problem: dinner cooked by an outstanding chef in beautiful surroundings, resulting in absolutely no washing up. Many award-winning and Michelin Star restaurants offer special mid-week menus to make the most of, not to mention increased availability, meaning a Wednesday evening could be the perfect time to finally try that restaurant that has been earmarked for months. What's more, with so many of Britain's best restaurants tucked away in the countryside, jumping in the car or on the train transforms dinner from three courses in a restaurant to a mid-week adventure, and a chance to explore somewhere new.

Live the 5-9 lifestyle: Gravetye Manor is easily accessible yet surrounded by Sussex countryside, serving up delectable dishes at its Michelin-starred The Dining Room, with a focus on seasonality and sustainability.

Finders keepers

More people than ever are turning to wild food and foraging, indulging in a more seasonal and sustainable way of cooking and dining...

Once a practice reserved for the intrepid truffle hunters of France or only the most informed chefs and gardeners, foraging has grown in mainstream popularity over recent years as people seek new and novel ways to live a wilder and more sustainable lifestyle. Luckily, as long as it is for personal consumption and the species is not endangered, foraging is completely legal in the UK, and in both the countryside and the city, foragers are combing the land for delicious produce. While the practice involves some research into safe and sustainable picking, thankfully the rise in fairweather foragers has led to plenty of courses and guided walks being launched to help turn people from novices to pro pickers in no time, meaning you can easily make the most of some of the most prized treasures British land has to offer...

Wild garlic

The cornerstone of any good meal, wild garlic has its own unmistakable scent that will add complex flavour profiles to any dish. Late winter through spring is the best time to forage, as wild garlic thrives in shady, damp conditions. The green pointed leaves and white flowers make this an easy to identify plant, and it can be found in woodlands throughout the UK. One of the best locations for wild garlic is Rampsholme Island in Cumbria - and nearby hotel Farlam Hall makes a point of foraging locally for ingredients for its menus and even some beverages.

Fennel

So common that it is often considered a pest, wild fennel grows in fields and on roadsides, and is usually found along the coast. Identifiable by its tiny yellow flowers and distinctive smell, fennel is best to forage for eating from late spring through to early summer.

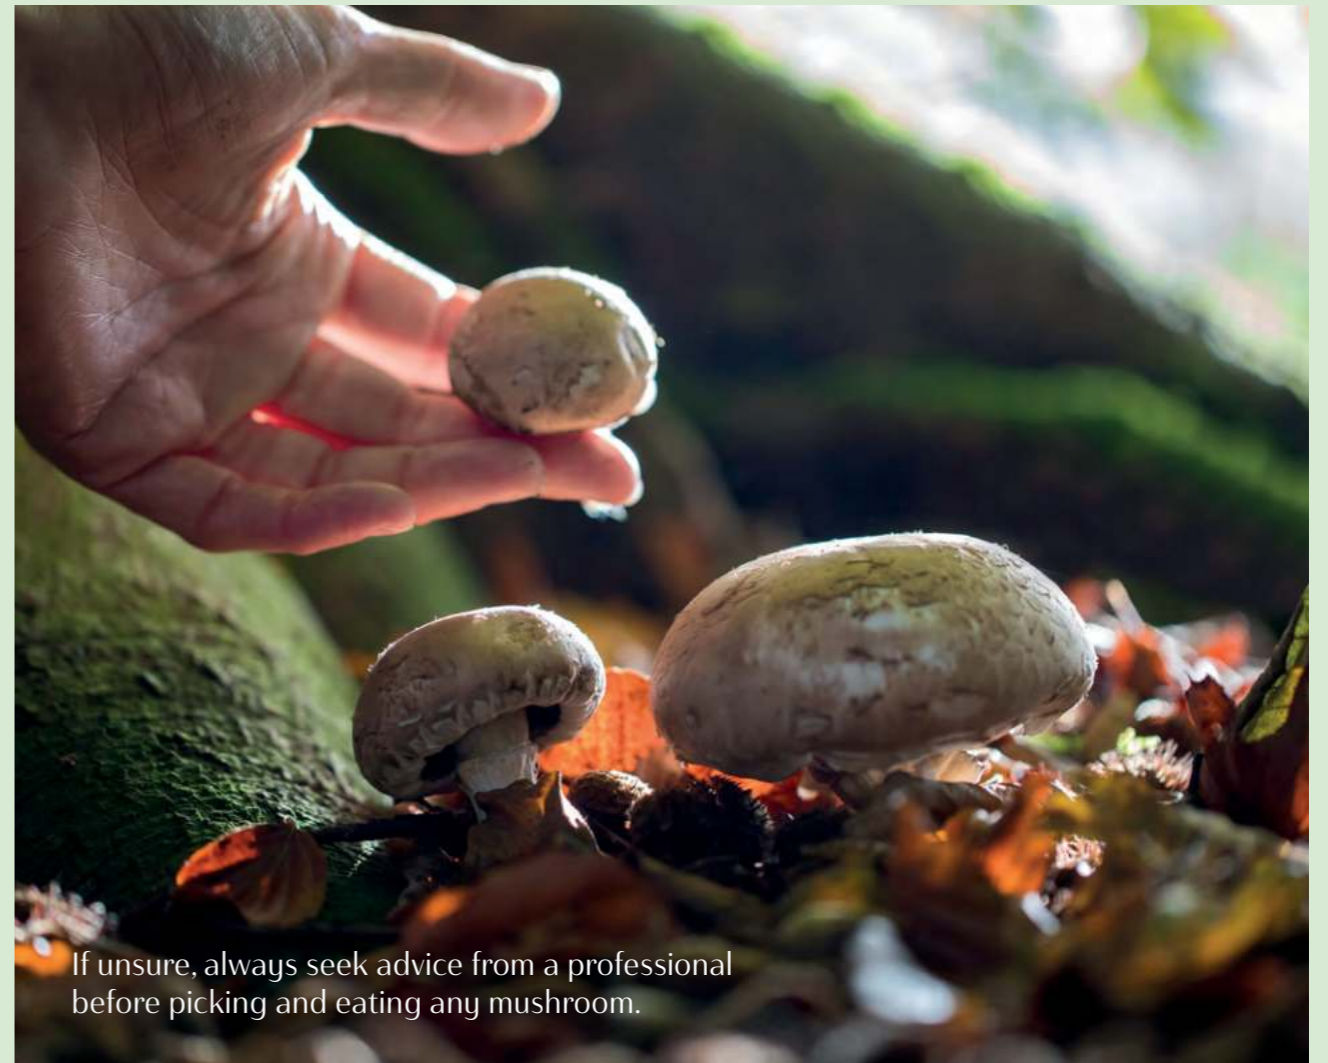

Elderflower

Fragrant and delicate, elderflower is plentiful in the UK from May until August, with June being the best time to collect it thanks to the flowers being freshest. Despite elderflower's elegant reputation, elder trees, which the plant grows on, are actually very common in the UK in woods and on roadside hedgerows. For an elevated foraging experience, head to Cromlix hotel in Scotland, which offers a private guided tour in the wilds of Perthshire, tasting local food and gathering wild produce.

Mushrooms

These are often the first food people think of when they think of foraging, and for good reason: wild mushrooms are abundant in the UK. Autumn is the best time to pick them, and they are found in woodlands the length and breadth of Britain. Look out for beech, oak and birch trees - but novices should always seek advice from a professional before picking any mushroom. Lucky guests at Glenapp Castle in Scotland can take advantage of the on-site guide and chefs who will teach the basics of foraging and help them safely select produce which can then be cooked and served that day.

If unsure, always seek advice from a professional before picking and eating any mushroom.

The Goring

Historic yet contemporary, metropolitan yet green, iconic yet full of unexpected gems: just a few reasons why we adore our London hotels.

From the charming townhouses that line Belgravia to Mayfair's gourmet restaurants and the verdant hues of Hyde Park, London's earned a reputation as being one of the world's most-loved cities - and we can see why.

THE ATHENAEUM HOTEL & RESIDENCES

116 Piccadilly, Mayfair, London, W1J 7BJ

Enquiries: 0207 499 3464 or email: info@athenaeumhotel.com

This Art-Deco beauty has been standing in the heart of Mayfair since 1850, but it hasn't stood still. Step outside and you're opposite Green Park, step in and you're in the height of contemporary glamour.

Your place to stay, enjoy a drink and take in the cityscape in quiet retreat-like calm. Reminiscent, though arguably quieter, than the Victorian gentleman's club that this building once housed. Choose from a room, suite or your very own front door in the private Victorian townhouse residences, a Mayfair home from home. All at once sleek, glitzy, welcoming, comfortable and incredibly luxurious. A true icon.

Elegant, warm, intimate and personal - perfect words to describe The Goring. Being the closest hotel to Buckingham Palace it's a regal favourite and received a Royal Warrant in 2013. Built in Belgravia during the Edwardian era by Otto Goring, it's remarkably been run by subsequent members of the Goring family ever since. This is the undisputed 'baby grand' of London hotels, often visited by royals and famously used by the Middleton family on the occasion of the marriage of Their Royal Highnesses The Prince and Princess of Wales.

WHAT THE EXPERTS SAY

"The Goring has been a favourite of The Queen for decades and afternoon tea at the hotel is a classic, regal affair."

HARTWELL HOUSE & SPA

Oxford Road, near Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire, HP17 8NR
Enquiries: 0129 674 7444 or email: info@hartwell-house.com

Hartwell House stands proudly in the Vale of Aylesbury, an area of outstanding natural beauty. Part Jacobean mansion and part Georgian house, this is a building as unique and opulent as its location.

Owned by the National Trust, but once the home of Louis XVIII, 'magisterial' comes to mind. Book time in the spa. Float in the pool and immerse yourself in a Regency-designed oasis. Journey through the rooms in this special place and note the decorative ceilings, original plasterwork, palatial fireplaces, antiquarian libraries and art. Open the door to the bedrooms and sink into 18th century, four-poster opulence.

SOPWELL HOUSE HOTEL & SPA

Cottonmill Lane, St Albans, Hertfordshire, AL1 2HQ
Enquiries: 0172 786 4477 or email: enquiries@sopwellhouse.co.uk

Nestled in 12 acres of Hertfordshire countryside in St Albans, Sopwell House is a luxury hotel and spa where classic Georgian splendour and the warmth of a family-run business combine.

Modernist architectural features are set amongst ancient avenues of trees. Colossal oaks, poplar and beech trees stand sentinel, they could tell tales of Anne Boleyn's stay at Sopwell, or the engagement evening of HRH Duke of Edinburgh's parents. Sophistication is in every detail combined with the personal touch and warmth of a small family-run hotel.

Visit for warm hospitality

TALBOOTH HOUSE & SPA

Stratford Road, Dedham, Colchester, Essex, CO7 6HN

Enquiries: 0120 632 2367 or email: talboothhouseandspa@milsomhotels.com

From the riverside restaurant and ultra-relaxing spa to the beautifully decorated rooms and iconic history woven throughout, each area here is as individual as Talbooth House itself.

Step in through the front door of this iconic Victorian country house and cast your gaze out from the terrace, across the lawns and tennis court to 'Constable's Country'. Dine at the 3AA Rosettes Talbooth Restaurant on the riverside, book some 'me-time' in the spa or plunge into the outdoor pool and hot tub. Don a robe and curl up afterwards on a sofa in the pool house with the crackle of the open log fire for company.

WHAT THE EXPERTS SAY

"More like a private home than a hotel, the 12 bedroom Talbooth House suits those who want a proper country escape. It's deep in Dedham Vale, think sherbet-coloured cottages and strolls along the river Stour. There is a new Spa inside a walled garden and equally appealing is the highly acclaimed Talbooth Restaurant."

LEWTRENCHARD MANOR

Lewtrenchard, Okehampton, Devon, EX20 4PN

Enquiries: 0156 678 3222 or email: info@lewtrenchard.co.uk

You'll find this beautiful manor house nestled in a secluded valley beneath Dartmoor's wild tors and moors. History is in every corner of the hotel, but its atmosphere is truly tranquil.

This house was a hideaway, virtually untouched by the hands of time. The fairytale approach seems wholly suitable for the breathtaking architecture and location of family-owned-and-run Lewtrenchard Manor. This perfect example of Jacobean artistry dates back to the early 1600s. The location, the tranquil grounds, the original coats of arms, stucco ceilings, portraits, wood panelled drawing rooms and luxury suites could well have come straight from the pages of an illuminated text.

Visit for a sense of tranquillity

GRANTLEY HALL

Ripon, North Yorkshire, HG4 3ET

Enquiries: 0176 562 0070 or email: hello@grantleyhall.co.uk

One of the Yorkshire Dales' hidden gems, Grantley Hall is a country house and spa where rich history and elegance are woven into every detail.

If these wood panelled walls could talk, they'd tell tales of the royal and famous who've visited to the war effort with Dame Vera Lynn singing to the troops. But this is no museum. Classical elegance sits as comfortably alongside contemporary luxury as the plush velvet stools do to the oak bar. Today the tales would be of guests in a deep sense of bliss following a day at the spa, walking in the private parklands or taking in the opulent yet welcoming interior.

Visit for rich English history

Be inspired by the gorgeous Japanese garden

Don't forget trainers for the state-of-the-art gym

WHAT THE EXPERTS SAY

"Guests are spoilt rotten here: though it has just 47 beautiful bedrooms, there's a lake and English Heritage-listed Japanese garden, a sybaritic wellness centre, imaginative programme of events and no less than seven drinking and dining venues."

A helping hand for Mother Nature

Everyone can play a meaningful role in rewilding, leading to a more sustainable way of living and gardening, and creating beautiful scenery and rewarding experiences along the way...

There aren't many who fail to be moved by the natural beauty of the Cotswolds, its woodlands, rivers and lakes.

But not all is quite as it seems. It turns out, some of the area's stunning vistas – and indeed, much of the UK – are not entirely the work of Mother Nature. Even she, like all of us, needs a little helping hand sometimes to look and feel her best.

Many of Britain's loveliest landscapes and most charming corners are down in no small part to the efforts of rewilding. A word that may well evoke images of places simply left alone to grow wildly, it actually refers to many different methods and outcomes that enable a wild place to truly flourish. Rewilding is a passion and pursuit adopted by large swathes of the population and one available to and enjoyed by all, even those in busy urban areas.

Calcot & Spa has been leading the way in rewilding for an impressive 25 years, MD Richard Ball tells us: "Gently and with guidance from experts over the last 25 years we've worked with the land and together with our green fingered team further developed the rewilding project and sustainability throughout the business – it is, of course work in progress but a journey we are undertaking with enthusiasm from our team at Calcot." Following the initial purchase of a neighboring strawberry field, work soon started to transform it into a wildflower meadow that guests still enjoy today. This, in turn, led to a wider project that has created a pleasing patchwork of grassland, woodland and fields – acres of wild spaces that surround the property that guests are welcome to explore and reconnect with the great outdoors.

Bee hives at Calcot & Spa

Taste the honey produced at Calcot & Spa

Not only does a stroll or bike ride offer the exciting prospect of spotting rare and endangered birds but also the chance to become a vital part of the project yourself by reporting back on what species you've seen.

For an even sweeter way to experience the rewilding efforts at Calcot, make a beeline for the two new hives recently introduced and taste the heavenly honey produced on the property. Helping bees is one of the simplest and most accessible ways to learn more about the rewilding movement thanks to bee-keeping experiences available in both city and countryside locations across the country. Better still, you can play your own small part at home.

And has the project had a positive impact on guests? Undoubtedly, says Ball: "The interest and feedback from our guests has been wonderfully encouraging and has clearly enhanced the overall hotel experience for many - our little guests are particularly enjoying the more nature based activities using our Cotswold backyard of 220 acres! Watch this green space for more rewilding news in 2023..."

Rewilding is a passion and pursuit adopted by large swathes of the population and one available to and enjoyed by all.

Celebrating our winners

Every year, each PoB Hotels member is anonymously inspected to our exacting standards. These featured hotels were chosen as our annual award winners - each excelling in exceptional guest experiences, unique dining and inspiring initiatives.

FINGAL

Hotel of the Year Award

Hotel of the Year was awarded to Fingal. As you step on board, this one-of-a-kind floating hotel welcomes you with an effortless blend of old-world elegance and modern-day glamour. An unforgettable experience awaits, starting with your uniquely spectacular cabin, complete with curved walls and portholes. An evening in The Lighthouse Restaurant & Bar, with its art deco interiors and shimmering ceiling, is not complete without one of Fingal's signature nautical-inspired cocktails. Stargaze on the vast decks, discover the heritage of this historic vessel, or explore Edinburgh's vibrant waterfront on your doorstep - you're reminded at every turn that this is no ordinary getaway.

NORTHCOTE

The Inspiring Initiative Award

Northcote's Obsession took our annual Inspiring Initiative Award for their celebration of fine dining. Obsession brings together world class chefs to showcase their extraordinary gastronomical talent over two weeks. Each chef takes over Executive Chef Lisa Goodwin-Allen's Northcote kitchen for a night, championing unsung cuisines and performing new techniques to create unforgettable unique menus. But Obsession is about more than just the very best food and wine - all profits go to a chosen charity, the most recent being Hospitality Action. Bring your appetite, you're going to need it.

Seventeen nights, twenty chefs and sixteen Michelin Stars - it's the fine dining festival which has become everyone's obsession...

GILPIN HOTEL & LAKE HOUSE

Restaurant of the Year Award

With a fascinating history as a centre of the spice trade, Cumbrian cuisine has a rich heritage, and local specialities have long included exotic spices with favourites such as Cumberland sausage, potted shrimps, Grasmere gingerbread, and of course, sticky toffee pudding. At our Restaurant of the Year winner Gilpin Hotel & Lake House, this tradition is celebrated - take your pick from refined Michelin-starred tasting menus with a twist, indulgent afternoon teas, or laid-back tapas-style pan-Asian dishes.

Sponsored by Moët Hennessy

"Within the grounds is a lovingly tended garden thriving with fruit, vegetables and herbs that influence the seasonal menu at the Gilpin's two restaurants."

SUSTAINABILITY

PoB Hotels is committed to responsible travel and the importance of sustainable practices across our collection of the finest hotels in the British Isles. The hotels have not only been invited into the collection as a result of being beautifully appointed, but also for being operated by some of the finest hoteliers and most caring families.

PoB Hotels has partnered with EarthCheck - the world's leading scientific benchmarking, certification and advisory group for travel and tourism - to develop environmental good practice and certification for hotel members, and company-wide regenerative practices. This is an important step in our ongoing commitment to sustainability and a way to promote the importance of sustainable practices across our hotels. The independent hotels are on their individual journey to create positive impact within their respective communities featuring issues of social, economic and sustainable scope.

Sustainable printing

We've worked hard to ensure the sustainability of our business collateral and this publication has been produced using vegetable oil-based inks, water-based coatings and carbon balanced paper from sustainable and responsibly managed forests. The print process has been tailored to minimise any environmental impact and aligned to the environmental standard of ISO 14001, as well as being FSC and PEFC certified. As part of The Collection printing process, an additional donation is also made to the World Land Trust towards offsetting the impact of production and distribution.

Once you've enjoyed this book, we encourage you to share it with a friend or keep it and build up on our annual collections that each feature a unique theme to inspire your own journey to responsible travel.
